There are such things in the world as human rights. Among these, is the right of locomotion; the right of migration; the right which belongs to no particular race, but belongs alike to all and to all alike...

I have great respect for the blue eyed and light haired races of America. They are a mighty people...But I reject the arrogant and scornful theory by which they would limit migratory rights, or any other essential human rights to themselves, and which would make them the owners of this great continent to the exclusion of all other races of men...I hold that a liberal and brotherly welcome to all who are likely to come to the United States, is the only wise policy which this nation can adopt.

- Frederick Douglass

speaking in defense of Chinese immigrants on December 7, 1869
Dear Friends and Supporters,

In the recent past, we have seen new gains for immigrants, against a backdrop of increasingly troubling U.S. immigration policies and practices. The National Immigration Project/National Lawyers Guild (NIPNLG) is no stranger to difficult and often unpopular immigration issues. These include protecting the rights of noncitizens labeled as “terrorists” because of their ancestry or national origin, those who face criminal charges, immigrants who have survived intimate partner violence or other crimes, those living with HIV/AIDS, and noncitizens who suffer unlawful and discriminatory enforcement practices.

We are encouraged that issues that once caused some to view our work as “extreme,” are now firmly rooted within the U.S. mainstream. We are heartened, for example, that in Padilla v. Kentucky, the U.S. Supreme Court decided that failing to advise a noncitizen about the potential immigration consequences of criminal charges falls below accepted standards of criminal defense representation and violates a noncitizen defendant’s constitutional rights – a result only possible due to NIPNLG’s work to elevate the standards of criminal defense representation for so many years.

Still, we have much work ahead of us. Today, immigration remains a political wedge issue. Exploiting fears and anti-immigrant bias, the government claims to target its enforcement efforts against “violent criminals.” Statistics, however, show that the government distorts the facts. In addition, the government continues to advance harsh interpretations of the law to the detriment of productive immigrants and their families. We take seriously our task of exposing these distortions, promoting accountability, and fighting with immigrant communities against policies that needlessly separate families, deny legal rights, and divide working communities. We also advocate for the end of border enforcement policies that contribute to the ongoing tragedy of shocking numbers of immigrant deaths.

Although the DREAM Act is not yet law, we were thrilled to receive the Dreamer Defenders Award from the United We Dream coalition for our support for the DREAM Act to enable children of non-citizens to attend university. We are proud to support immigrants’ right to education.

As the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild marks its 40th Anniversary Year and I enter my twenty-sixth year as executive director, we know that the kind of social change we seek does not come easily. It requires passion, will, courage, organization, and perseverance. We feel that our mission, our voice, our ideas—and your support—are critical. I want to thank all our members and allies working to promote social justice for immigrants. You are central to our success. Rest assured that we will not flinch from future challenges. We hope that you will continue to stand with us in these difficult times.

Many thanks,

Dan Kesselbrenner
WHO WE ARE

The National Immigration Project is a national non-profit organization that provides legal and technical assistance to immigrant communities, legal practitioners, and advocates working to advance the rights of noncitizens. We promote justice and equality of treatment in all areas of immigration law, the criminal justice system, and in social policies related to immigration. Marking its 40th Anniversary Year in 2011, the National Immigration Project remains a progressive source of advocacy-oriented legal support on issues critical to immigrant rights.

The National Immigration Project specializes in defending people who are often excluded from society, including detained and incarcerated immigrants, noncitizens living with HIV/AIDS, and noncitizen survivors of intimate partner and sexual violence. Our work also counteracts the profiling of individuals, as well as punitive immigration enforcement programs that violate basic constitutional rights of noncitizens as well as citizens. We strengthen the technical capacity of immigration professionals, while promoting public policy change through direct advocacy. Our work is based upon a foundation of over 1,000 members nationwide, including immigration practitioners, legal advocates, detainees self-taught in the law, law students, community-based immigrant organizations, and all allies of fair and just U.S. immigration policy.

The National Immigration Project remains steadfast in its commitment, nimble in its response to emerging needs, and integrated in its program methodology. We invite you to join us as the National Immigration Project secures its future, protecting and expanding immigrant rights in the U.S. today, tomorrow, and into the next 40 years.
WHAT WE DO

CRIMINAL AND DEPORTATION DEFENSE

A noncitizen in the criminal justice system faces permanent banishment from the U.S. and separation from her or his family. Criminal defense counsel may be unaware or uninformed about the immigration consequences of a criminal conviction. NIPNLG has been at the forefront of the national effort to help criminal defense lawyers understand the law and protect their noncitizen clients.

Executive Director Dan Kesselbrenner is one of the leading experts on the intersection of criminal and immigration law in the U.S. The 2010 Supreme Court decision Padilla v. Kentucky, for example, cited the treatise that he co-authored, Immigration Law and Crimes, more than once, a testament to the value and longevity of the Project’s methodology and scholarship.

Since it began tracking requests in 2003, the National Immigration Project has provided well over 6,000 instances of direct technical assistance to attorneys and advocates in some fifty states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands, many pertaining to criminal and immigration policy.

DEFENDING POLITICAL RIGHTS

The National Immigration Project opposes immigration enforcement that limits the democratic participation of noncitizens in civil society. We work to ensure that noncitizens have the right to free political expression and participation in the free marketplace of ideas, by helping create tools for noncitizens to express their views, and by working with advocates to create response plans for noncitizens who engage in direct social actions for causes they believe in.

From at least the beginning of the last century and through the current era, immigrants have been targeted in the U.S. for their political views and activities. The National Immigration Project works to combat these unjust government actions through coalition-building, by providing legal analysis and strategies, by organizing with immigrant communities, and by providing legislative analysis of harmful legislative provisions.

NIPNLG provided legal support for this Atlanta immigrant rights’ march, enlisting our members and volunteers as legal observers.

For over two decades, the National Immigration Project has been a leader in expanding legal rights for noncitizens under victims’ rights legislation. We train practitioners to ensure that victims have meaningful access to the rights Congress granted through the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and subsequent legislation.

We also confront government interpretations that are inconsistent with these laws, which were enacted specifically to protect noncitizen victims. Above all, we advocate for victims and survivors within every phase of immigration enforcement, and in all immigration policy-setting arenas. Our work seeks to address the double (and often greater) disenfranchisement of individuals who are both immigrants and also victims of crimes, including survivors of intimate partner violence and sexual assault.

The Project also works at the intersection of its programs (e.g., when a victim of violence is also a noncitizen criminal defendant), thus connecting national efforts to counteract harsh enforcement and the criminalization of immigrants, with the victims’ rights movement. In addition, we liaise with the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) in especially troubling cases brought to us by our members, and provide assistance to advocates working with undocumented victims of violence.

Support for Noncitizens Living with HIV/AIDS

The National Immigration Project educates legal and health service providers about the immigration options for noncitizens living with HIV/AIDS, and advocates for their legal rights under U.S. immigration law.

On January 4, 2010, the National Immigration Project celebrated the lifting of the HIV immigration ban, as the Department of Health and Human Services issued its final ruling removing HIV from immigration regulations. As the government implements the lifting of the HIV ban, NIPNLG continues to play a pivotal role.
COUNTERACTING HARMFUL IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT PRACTICES AND RAIDS

In addition to cutting-edge legal strategies, the National Immigration Project develops community resources to increase awareness about draconian enforcement actions and the toll exacted upon families and communities. The current situation for noncitizens – and for people of color perceived to be noncitizens – is one of overreaching enforcement tactics that violate basic civil and human rights.

To promote government accountability and remedies for unlawful immigration enforcement activities, NIPNLG litigates before federal district courts, courts of appeal, and the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as in immigration courts and before the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA).

In addition, the Project routinely files amicus (friend of court) briefs in cases seeking to vindicate the legal rights of noncitizens. Through workshops, seminars, and consultation, the Project also trains attorneys to bring litigation that seeks to rectify governmental misconduct committed against noncitizens. Further, we prepare accessible printed materials so that ordinary individuals may understand their rights and responsibilities under U.S. law; conduct seminars on Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) programs for community groups; and train practitioners on how to argue that evidence obtained unlawfully from their clients should not be used against them.

The Project also mentors volunteer attorneys representing individuals arrested during immigration enforcement activities where government officials have violated the law.

NIPNLG’S REACH

The National Immigration Project maintains staff in its national headquarters in Boston, MA, and in Washington, D.C. Since 1984, NIPNLG has provided trainings in some 45 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands, with participants from all 50 states. The Project has trained over 5,000 community-based advocates, attorneys, judges, and law students on such topics as the immigration consequences of criminal conduct, immigration detention, immigrant victims of crimes, and posting bond. With roughly one thousand members nationwide, NIPNLG provided over 1,000 instances of technical assistance in 2010 on issues critical to immigrant justice.

FY2010 FINANCIAL REPORT

The National Immigration Project’s FY2010 financial results reflect the growing confidence of donors, members, and funders in the Project’s approach to achieving immigrant rights. It also reflects the Project’s diverse revenue base, which includes consulting fees, revenues from continuing legal education (CLE) seminars, income from books we publish or contribute to, foundation grants, membership dues, and individual contributions. We are thrilled that individuals contributed over $90,000 to the Project in 2010. We hope to surpass that amount in 2011 in honor of the National Immigration Project’s 40th Anniversary, and its future.

NIPNLG works hard to earn the confidence of our donors and partners, acting as good stewards of our contributors’ generosity. In 2010 we received restricted funds retained to fund multi-year programs. Additional assets will be used for future investments required to meet our program goals, and to ensure that adequate reserves are available to meet unexpected program needs. Our 2010 Financial Audit is available by contacting the Director of Development.

In the table below, we present the income and expenses for the 2010 fiscal year. The income is divided into several categories, with the largest source being foundation grants, followed by consulting services and individual donations. The expenses are also divided into several categories, with the largest being program expenses, followed by administration and management, and fundraising.

INCOME

- Foundation Grants: $307,000
- Consulting Services: $188,400
- Membership Dues: $139,800
- Publications: $129,200
- Donations: $92,200
- Seminars: $44,200
- Interest Income: $5,900

TOTAL: $906,700

EXPENSES

- Program: $603,600
- Admin. & Management: $133,300
- Membership Development: $52,400
- Fundraising: $42,000

TOTAL: $831,300
YOUR COMMITMENT

The National Immigration Project is extremely grateful to have earned the confidence and received support from over 220 individuals and foundations in 2010. The combined gifts and grants of our supporters contributed approximately $400,000 to the National Immigration Project’s efforts to defend and expand immigrant rights.

We extend heartfelt thanks to the individuals, foundations, and law firms listed below. We are grateful for each and every contribution, regardless of size or amount. We also deeply appreciate those individuals who donated anonymously in 2010, or via workplace giving campaigns such as the Combined Federal Campaign and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Employee Charitable Campaign.

Your collective generosity brings us closer to our goal of fair and just treatment under the law for all.
